

Theme

The goal of this workshop is to bring together economists to discuss recent topics related to global changes, international trade and health. Researchers are invited to submit both theoretical and empirical contributions. In particular, we welcome papers related to:

- Macroeconomics of climate change
- Environmental regulation and trade
- Global changes, biodiversity and health
- Globalization, epidemic outbreaks and economic implications

The workshop is open to anybody involved in these research areas, including both young and experienced researchers, Ph.D. students, post-doctoral researchers, and professionals from business, government and non-governmental institutions. There is no registration fee. Participants must support only travel and accommodation expenses.
